

A “timely yet timeless” weblog...

We'll just have to wait a decade or so to find out — when stopped at some traffic light in the future staring at these no-longer-shiny chrome badges of status — whether today's state-of-the-art green technology will have become ubiquitous and familiar enough to elicit a snicker...

The scary part is that you will end up being a mobile device beaming all sorts of data to who knows who — through barriers and from as far away as 700 feet. Imagine if your charge cards, clothing and shoes all were transmitting data (even the age and color of your underwear)!

*****

Will there be new faddish, jargon-laced management-speak still to come whose consequence will reduce jobs and salaries even more — and further level the highest standards of living with the poorest on earth? How many more employees with years of dedicated service, along with new job seekers with expensive academic degrees, will yet find that their career path is ultimately a horizontal plank?

... and much more!
